1 BACKGROUND

TE PATUKIRIKIRI BACKGROUND

- 1.1 In this background section Te Patukirikiri describe their kōrero tuku iho (history) about their origins.
- 1.2 Te Patukirikiri trace their principal descent from their eponymous tupuna Kapetaua. Tawake is a descendant of the Nga Tokimatawhaorua waka from Northland and the father of Kapetaua, while Te Auwhangarahi, his mother, was of Te Uri o Pou and Wai o Hua descent of the east Auckland districts. Tawake and Te Auwhangarahi were residing at Oue (Duders Beach area) near the Wairoa estuary (Clevedon) at the time their children, Tairuhi, a daughter, and Kapetaua, a son, were born to them.
- 1.3 Eventually Tairuhi married Tarakumukumu, an influential Auckland Wai o Hua chief, and lived with him at his principal pā Kohimarama. As a young boy Kapetaua upset his brother-in-law Tarakumukumu by innocently experimenting with his brother-in-law's oils and heru (combs) while visiting his sister at Kohimarama.
- 1.4 In response Tarakumukumu decided to teach Kapetaua a lesson and took the boy fishing with him not long after the incident. They fished for a while in the Waitematā Harbour and arriving at one of the rocks offshore, Tarakumukumu instructed Kapetaua to get out onto the rock and collect kūtai (mussels) to replenish their bait, and while Kapetaua was upon the reef Tarakumukumu abandoned him there. This rock became known as Te Toka a Kapetaua, or the rock of Kapetaua, but today this rock and reef is more commonly referred to as Bean Rock.
- 1.5 When Tarakumukumu returned to the pā alone dusk was approaching and Tairuhi enquired as to the whereabouts of her brother, to which he replied that he did not know, and he was perhaps off playing with some of the other boys. To alleviate her uneasiness about her brother's safety Tairuhi decided to occupy herself in the kūmara gardens. As twilight approached and as the daily bustle of pā noises decreased around her as night began to settle she heard a faint cry for help drifting across the harbour. Scanning the waters of the harbour she noticed some movement offshore, which could only be Kapetaua. She quickly hurried down to the shore and took a wakatētē (small canoe) and paddled out to discover Kapetaua struggling to tread water. She quickly collected her brother and returned to shore under the cover of darkness, and sent him to conceal himself near the gardens and informed him of the danger should he be discovered.
- 1.6 She immediately sent one of her retainers to her father Tawake at Oue Pā, to inform him of what had transpired and that Kapetaua would need to be collected by him as soon as possible. In the meantime Kapetaua remained hidden, waiting for his father.
- 1.7 The following morning Tarakumukumu was informed that his father-in-law was en route to the pā, so he prepared a feast to receive them. However when Tawake arrived he waited on the shore, ignoring his son-in-law's call of hospitality. Kapetaua made his way to the shoreline and was seen by Tarakumukumu emerging from the foliage to join his father in his waka, where they immediately departed for home at Oue Pā.

DEED OF SETTLEMENT

1: BACKGROUND

- 1.8 By this act Tarakumukumu realised that he had been marked for utu (revenge).
- 1.9 As Kapetaua grew he trained hard to become a very competent warrior. The urge to avenge himself on his brother-in-law burned deeply within him, and when the time came he selected his tāua (war party) of only 60 men and went through the proper rites for a successful mission. By this time, Tarakumukumu and his people were occupying their main Waiheke Island pā.
- 1.10 When all was ready, Kapetaua set off for the short trip to Waiheke Island, and arriving as planned at Whakanewa just after nightfall, he and his men ascended under darkness the dividing ridge between Whakanewa and Rangihoua Pā, and descended upon the pā. To their surprise, they noticed a lack of sentries in the area, and later discovered that most of the people were in discussion within the great house, or wharenuī, Mahitukua, which backed onto a rock cliff. Leaving his men outside to guard against any escape, Kapetaua entered the wharenuī, and keeping to the shadows listened to the conversation circulating within.
- 1.11 Surprisingly, the discussion was focussed on his expedition against them, and as good fortune would have it they had miscalculated the timing of his expected expedition. When a query arose as to what Kapetaua may look like now that he was a young man, he stood and responded "perhaps he looks like me", and leapt back out through the door. Giving a signal his men immediately set fire to the wharenuī, and while some of them stood guard at the doors and windows to prevent any escape from Mahitukua, the remainder of his men slew those people not inside the great house. As a result many died that night at Rangihoua Pā, however some did escape the attack, including Tarakumukumu, whom it appears was not in the great house at the time.
- 1.12 The expedition took two further pā at Putiki Bay, being Kapuamotomoto and Kupapa, and another called Kohairoa, further east than that. With these people no longer a threat, Kapetaua was free to pursue Tarakumukumu to the Takapuna area, where he caught and executed Tarakumukumu at Rahopara Pā (Milford).
- 1.13 Satisfied that he had avenged himself against Tarakumukumu, Kapetaua was free to claim by right of conquest his brother-in-law's old estate in Auckland.
- 1.14 Kapetaua soon left Oue Pā, leaving that area to his parents' Uri o Pou section and their relatives, areas which included Pakuranga, Awakarahi, Mangemangeroa, Ohuirangi, Tuwakamana, Te Kowhai, Mananui, Maraetai, and Whakakaiwhara, while he moved to Kohimarama Pā, from which location he exercised his newly gained authority over the old domains of Tarakumukumu. In accordance with customary tradition, he took possession of pā at Waiheke Island, Ōkahu, Ōrākei, Maungauika, Takarunga, Kiritai, Takapuna, Rahopara, and Wairau, and later some of his descendents settled at Orere and Kawakawa.
- 1.15 During this time the other Wai o Hua and Uri o Pou sections of Auckland remained neutral to the conflict between the brothers-in-law, as in their eyes this dispute that ended with the death of Tarakumukumu was an internal whānau matter. The other two residing East Auckland tribes at that time were not of direct Wai o Hua descent. These were Ngai Tuhuhu and Ngāti Taihaua (Ngāti Tai). These iwi also remained neutral, and accepted Kapetaua as the newly formed authority in the East Auckland district.

1: BACKGROUND

Unfortunately for these two tribes, they were later dispossessed of their tribal authority and estate in the area for a murder committed against another iwi in the Tāmaki River area.

- 1.16 Wai o Hua and Uri o Pou were closely related to Ngāti Huarere. These tribes were all of the Arawa waka, with the latter residing throughout Hauraki, particularly in the northern districts of the region. Due to this blood relationship, Kapetaua soon learnt of a famous cultivation in Kapanga (Coromandel) called Te Rakato, which the local Huarere people were extremely proud of. Coveting this cultivation, Kapetaua raised an expedition and crossed the Hauraki Gulf / Tīkapa Moana, travelling to Kapanga and taking possession of Te Rakato from his Ngāti Huarere relatives.
- 1.17 That was the first major move into Hauraki by the tupuna of Te Patukirikiri.
- 1.18 From there, Kapetaua and his son, Te Uira, intermarried with the local Ngāti Huarere people in the area, and their descendents grew in numbers to take possession of areas throughout the Moehau region, particularly at Tokatea, Koputauaki, Kikowhakarere, Kennedy Bay, and Whangapoua.
- 1.19 In the meantime, his people who remained in Auckland retained possession and defended his domains there, living in close proximity with his mother's people.
- 1.20 Following this, another famous warrior arrived in Hauraki searching for his father. This was Marutūāhu, who took two local women of Kahui Ariki and Uri o Pou descent as wives, and with their people avenged his father's mistreatment and soon settled with them and their people at Whakatiwai, on the western shores of the Hauraki Gulf / Tīkapa Moana. This district abutted the east Auckland district. Needless to say, these two sections of Uri o Pou (Whakatiwai and east Auckland) were very closely related.

Patukirikiri blood relationships

- 1.21 To set the background to the relationship of Patukirikiri with the Marutūāhu people in both Auckland and Hauraki we must turn our attention to how that relationship was established without affecting the autonomy and authority of the tribes involved. For example, Patukirikiri in Auckland are more closely related to Ngāti Paoa, while in Hauraki they are more closely related to Ngāti Tamaterā, both the latter named being primary tribal groups of the Marutūāhu people.
- 1.22 The Marutūāhu history in relation to Auckland began with the arrival of the Arawa and Tainui waka in Auckland and Hauraki regions around the 1300s AD. Some of the crew of both waka disembarked in Hauraki and again in Auckland to begin their new lives.
- 1.23 Marama Kiko Hura, a junior wife of Hoturoa, the captain of the Tainui waka, migrated to Hauraki shortly after the Tainui waka arrived in the Waikato region and established her people in Hauraki as Nga Marama. Needless to say, Nga Marama intermarried with those tribes of Arawa extraction.

1: BACKGROUND

The Marutūāhu people

- 1.24 When the tupuna Marutūāhu arrived in Hauraki seeking his father's whereabouts, the descendants of Arawa were already firmly established in the Auckland and Hauraki region, as were others like Patukirikiri. However the descendants of Huarere instigated a war with the Marutūāhu people by murdering one of their own close relatives, Waenganui, who had married the youngest son of Marutūāhu. Four generations later saw the general conclusion of this conflict, resulting in the Arawa waka influence being severed in both Hauraki and in Auckland.
- 1.25 In Auckland, Wai o Hua were not too concerned with the war in Hauraki as it fully favoured Ngāti Huarere, who by contrast to the Marutūāhu people, were well established in the region, were very numerous, and had a number of strong allies to call upon for aid. However, as the wars progressed Wai o Hua became exceedingly alarmed at the defeats their relations had suffered at the hands of the Marutūāhu.
- 1.26 As a result, Wai o Hua decided to take direct action against the Marutūāhu people, and commenced this warfare when the Wai o Hua branch living at Puketutu in Māngere were aware that Te Ureia, a Marutūāhu Taniwha, regularly basked in the Waitemātā Harbour near an outcropping of rock known as Te Rotu o Ureia (Point Erin). At the instigation of his Puketutu people, Haumia invited Te Ureia to Māngere for a visit, where he was lured into the shallows and murdered. Their actions proved extremely costly for the Wai o Hua dynasty, particularly in Auckland.
- 1.27 These indiscretions against the Marutūāhu resulted in Ngāti Maru raising a Marutūāhu expedition principally consisting of Ngāti Whanaunga and Ngāti Tamaterā, and their respective allies, like Patukirikiri, who, through the marriage of Rangitaotao of Patukirikiri to Kunawhea, a daughter of Tamaterā, was obligated to accompany Ngāti Tamaterā in this expedition.
- 1.28 When Europeans arrived in the Moehau region, Patukirikiri were in possession of a large amount of tribal lands. Patukirikiri welcomed the newcomers, even allowing intermarriages to occur, encouraging Europeans to settle in the district.
- 1.29 When the tribes of Pare Hauraki returned to the Hauraki Gulf / Tīkapa Moana at the end of the Musket Wars, Te Patukirikiri were well-positioned to trade with the trickle of Europeans who were making their way into the region seeking wealth from its timber and to trade European goods for Māori agricultural produce. Pita Taurua, Makoare Te Pukeroa, and Kapanga Te Arakuri of Te Patukirikiri levied the sum of £6 on ships entering Coromandel Harbour. European entrepreneurs sought interests in Māori land, particularly in the months leading up to the signing of the Treaty of Waitangi in 1840. Te Patukirikiri were among a number of tribes who entered into agreements with these Europeans, which were recorded in the form of European deeds. While Europeans generally seemed to have seen these transactions as purchases, they took place in a Māori context where agreements were seen as enhancing tribal interests rather than extinguishing them. Harbours were seen as particularly valuable and there were a number of transactions involving Te Patukirikiri around Coromandel Harbour and the islands outside its heads.

2 HISTORICAL ACCOUNT

- 2.1 The Crown's acknowledgements and apology to Te Patukirikiri in part 3 are based on this historical account.

INTRODUCTION

- 2.2 In the early nineteenth century Te Patukirikiri exercised customary interests in lands at Waiheke, Waiaua (Coromandel), Te Whare-kai-atua (Colville), Whangapoua, and in the western Hauraki Plains. As Te Patukirikiri increasingly came into contact with Pākehā in their rohe in the 1820s, members of the iwi sought to pursue related commercial opportunities. Te Patukirikiri also began entering into land agreements with Pākehā, notably a transaction with two settlers concerning Whanganui Island in 1836.

THE LAND CLAIMS COMMISSION

- 2.3 In 1840 the Crown established a Land Claims Commission to investigate pre-Treaty land purchases by private parties. If the land the Crown considered to have been validly purchased was greater than the area it granted to settlers the Crown's policy was to retain the balance of the land itself, as 'surplus land', on the basis the original transaction had extinguished Māori customary title. The Crown retained approximately 173 acres of 'surplus' lands from investigation into the Whanganui Island transaction. During the investigation no adequate survey of the purchase was made and no investigation was made into whether Te Patukirikiri retained adequate lands for their needs.
- 2.4 In many instances in 1844 and 1845 the Crown waived its Treaty-right to pre-emptive purchasing to allow settlers to purchase land directly from Māori. The Crown committed to reserve ten per cent of the land, or tenths, from each sale for public purposes, specifically for the benefit of Māori.
- 2.5 In 1845 settlers purchased 850 acres at Waiheke and 800 acres at Coromandel and Cape Colville from Te Patukirikiri in pre-emption waiver purchases. During the Crown's investigations, no surveys were required and no tenths were set aside. The Crown also made no assessment of the adequacy of lands remaining in Te Patukirikiri ownership.
- 2.6 In 1845 the Crown ceased issuing pre-emption waiver certificates, and commissioners were appointed to investigate the pre-emption waiver transactions. In November 1846 the Crown reneged on its commitment to reserve tenths. The Crown applied its surplus lands policy when granting land to settlers, and land not awarded to settlers was retained by the Crown as 'surplus land'.

GOLD FIELD AGREEMENTS

- 2.7 In 1852 gold was discovered in Hauraki. In November that year, some Marutūāhu, including Te Patukirikiri, agreed with the Crown at a hui at Patapata that some Māori-owned land could be licensed for gold prospecting and mining for three years. The land was to remain in Māori ownership and the Crown would manage the licences. The

2: HISTORICAL ACCOUNT

Crown was to make regular lease-payments to the Māori landowners. However, only a small amount of gold was mined in the 1850s.

- 2.8 In 1861 the Otago gold rush led to renewed interest in gold mining in Hauraki. Again, Te Patukirikiri, along with other Marutūāhu, entered into a general agreement with the Crown to allow prospecting on Māori land. In July 1862 they further agreed with the Crown on the opening of the Kapanga, Ngarukehu, and Matawai mining blocks around Coromandel Harbour. Under this agreement Māori right-owners were to be paid £1 per miner per annum.

WAR AND RAUPATU

- 2.9 By the early 1860s rising tensions between the Crown and some Māori had led to the establishment of the Kīngitanga in the Waikato. On 12 July 1863 the Crown invaded the Waikato when its armed forces crossed the Mangatāwhiri Awa. The Crown considered South Auckland and Hauraki lands strategically important because of the need to protect supply lines and settlements in and around Auckland. During the war which followed, the Crown occupied lands of some Pare Hauraki, including lands near Pūkorokoro in which Te Patukirikiri had customary interests.
- 2.10 On 31 October 1863 the Crown proclaimed a blockade of the Hauraki Gulf / Tīkapa Moana. The Crown dispatched HMS Miranda and HMS Sandfly to prevent supplies reaching the Kīngitanga, and to patrol for Māori believed to be opposing the Crown presence in the Waikato. According to Te Patukirikiri they felt intimidated by the actions of these vessels in the coastal areas of their rohe. The Crown further established a number of military bases in the Hauraki district.
- 2.11 The Crown regarded Māori who had opposed its invasion as 'rebels'. The Crown subsequently confiscated large areas of Māori land. The East Waikato confiscation district, proclaimed in 1865, included land in which Te Patukirikiri had customary interests. In carrying out raupatu the Crown extinguished all customary interests Māori had in the confiscated lands. The Crown subsequently paid Te Patukirikiri monetary compensation for their interests in the East Waikato confiscation district.

THE NATIVE LAND COURT

- 2.12 The Native Land Court was established under the Native Lands Acts of 1862 and 1865, and held its first hearings in the Hauraki district in 1865. The acts establishing the Native Land Court set aside the Crown's Article Two Treaty of Waitangi right of pre-emption, enabling individual Māori to dispose of their property by lease or sale to private parties or the Crown once title had been awarded.
- 2.13 Any Māori could initiate a title investigation by submitting an application to the Native Land Court. When the court decided to hear an application, all those with customary interests needed to participate in the hearing if they wished to be included in the Crown title, regardless of whether they wanted a Crown title or not. Customary tenure was complex and facilitated multiple forms of land-use through shared relationships with the land. The new land laws required those rights to be fixed within a surveyed boundary and did not necessarily include all those with a customary interest in the land. Under

2: HISTORICAL ACCOUNT

Māori customary title land was held communally. When Crown title was awarded to Māori, interests were awarded to named individuals.

- 2.14 In July 1865 the Native Land Court investigated ten claims regarding Coromandel blocks brought before it by Te Patukirikiri rangatira. These were awarded to the Te Patukirikiri rangatira named in the claims. Another thirteen Coromandel blocks were brought before the court in October and December 1865. These were variously awarded to Te Patukirikiri rangatira and rangatira of another Marutūāhu iwi. Between August 1865 and April 1869 the Native Land Court investigated title for fourteen blocks, totalling 6500 acres, on Waiheke. Te Patukirikiri were awarded interests with another Marutūāhu iwi in two of these, the 43-acre Te Rangihoua 1 block and the 206-acre Te Rangihoua 2 block.
- 2.15 Soon after these awards many of the owners of these blocks sold their interests. For example, the two Waiheke blocks shared with another Marutūāhu iwi were purchased by a settler in 1866 and 1868, while the 167-acre Taumatawahine block at Coromandel was sold by a Te Patukirikiri rangatira to settlers in 1871. By this point Te Patukirikiri were left in possession of Motutapere Island, the 778-acre Kapanga block, and little else.

RESIDENCE SITE LICENCES

- 2.16 In the 1860s, with the owners' agreement, the Crown included occupation and other rights in its gold mining licences. Residence site licences were incorporated in the new mining legislation regime which was introduced in the early 1870s. In return for a small annual fee, licensees received a long-term and renewable right to occupy and build upon a site of up to one acre, for which the Crown collected fees which it paid to Māori landowners in addition to mining lease payments. Licensees did not have to be gold miners. Māori were unable to remove their lands from such agreements, although the Crown had the power to cancel licences. Despite the decline of gold mining in Hauraki after the 1860s, the Crown did not revoke the declarations of the goldfields, which meant that residence site licences and the lands they concerned remained subject to Crown control. The Crown continued to grant residence site licences through to the late 1920s.
- 2.17 Throughout the nineteenth and twentieth centuries the Crown did not ensure rents for the licences or leases were regularly revised to account for inflation, which meant Māori landowners frequently received rents for their lands which were well below market values. In 1962 Parliament passed the Mining Tenures Registration Act, which removed the Crown's power to cancel licences for breach of the original conditions of use and converted the licences to leases renewable every twenty-one years in perpetuity. In 1976 some Pare Hauraki leaders sought a resolution to their outstanding residence site licence grievances in the High Court. They were unsuccessful. However, in 1980 they reached an agreement with the Crown. The Crown made compensation for lands subject to residence site licences, for the inadequacy of past rents, and for Māori having no alternative but to have those lands purchased by the Crown.
- 2.18 By 1871 Te Patukirikiri were virtually landless. Most of the little land remaining in individual iwi member's ownership was sold over the course of the twentieth century.

DEED OF SETTLEMENT
2: HISTORICAL ACCOUNT

At the end of the twentieth century, less than three per cent of the Hauraki rohe remained in Māori hands.

SOCIO-ECONOMIC CIRCUMSTANCES OF TE REO MĀORI

- 2.19 Prior to 1840 all Hauraki Māori spoke te reo Māori fluently. At the end of the nineteenth century many Hauraki Māori were bilingual, but most spoke te reo Māori as their primary means of communication. The first government Native School in Hauraki opened in 1883. The Crown saw the Native School system in part as a means of assimilating Māori, including Te Patukirikiri, into European culture. Māori children were strongly discouraged from speaking te reo Māori at school, and were punished if they did. Monolingualism increased in the period 1950-1975, when the effect of education policies was compounded by urbanisation. A new generation of parents were convinced that their children had to speak English to succeed in the Pākehā world. The supremacy of English-language mass media exacerbated this decline of te reo Māori. By 1975 five per cent of Māori children could kōrero Māori. By the end of the twentieth century, twenty-seven per cent of Hauraki Māori spoke te reo Māori. The decline of te reo Māori contributed to a loss of Te Patukirikiri mātauranga Māori.
- 2.20 In the twentieth and twenty-first centuries, Te Patukirikiri, like other Pare Hauraki, generally experienced poorer health, including lower life-expectancy and higher infant-mortality rates, than Pākehā. Pare Hauraki also experienced higher unemployment and lower mean annual income rates than the general New Zealand population during the twentieth and early twenty-first centuries.

3 ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS AND APOLOGY

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

- 3.1 The Crown acknowledges that until now it has failed to deal with the long-standing grievances of Te Patukirikiri and that recognition of and redress for these grievances is long overdue.
- 3.2 The Crown acknowledges the willingness of Te Patukirikiri to provide resources and lands for settlement, and that these early land transactions contributed to the establishment of the settler economy and the development of New Zealand.
- 3.3 The Crown acknowledges that –
 - 3.3.1 it took Te Patukirikiri lands, including lands at Waiheke, Coromandel and Colville, as surplus from disallowed pre-emption waiver claims and that its policy of taking surplus land has been a source of grievance to Te Patukirikiri; and
 - 3.3.2 it did not always protect Te Patukirikiri interests during investigations into these transactions; and
 - 3.3.3 its policy of taking surplus land from pre-emption waiver purchases breached Te Tiriti o Waitangi/the Treaty of Waitangi and its principles when it failed to assess whether Te Patukirikiri retained adequate lands for their needs.
- 3.4 The Crown acknowledges that by failing to set aside one tenth of the lands transacted during the pre-emption waiver period for public purposes, especially the establishment of schools and hospitals for the future benefit of Māori (including Te Patukirikiri), it breached Te Tiriti o Waitangi/the Treaty of Waitangi and its principles.
- 3.5 The Crown acknowledges that –
 - 3.5.1 its representatives and advisers acted unjustly and in breach of Te Tiriti o Waitangi/the Treaty of Waitangi and its principles in sending its forces across the Mangatāwhiri Awa in July 1863, and invading and occupying land in which Te Patukirikiri had interests; and
 - 3.5.2 its naval blockade of the Hauraki Gulf / Tīkapa Moana using heavily armed gun boats intimidated Te Patukirikiri; and
 - 3.5.3 the confiscation of land in East Waikato in which Te Patukirikiri had interests was unjust and a breach of Te Tiriti o Waitangi/the Treaty of Waitangi and its principles.
- 3.6 The Crown acknowledges that valuable gold resources on lands leased by Te Patukirikiri and others provided economic benefits to the nation.

DEED OF SETTLEMENT

3: ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS AND APOLOGY

- 3.7 The Crown acknowledges that –
- 3.7.1 it continued to control lands in Hauraki owned by Te Patukirikiri which were leased to settlers through residence site licences for many years after the decline of the gold mining industry in the region; and
 - 3.7.2 it failed for many decades to regularly revise rents for residence site licence lands, and that Te Patukirikiri received rents well below market-value for the lease of their lands as a consequence of this failure; and
 - 3.7.3 it promoted legislation that converted residence site licences to leases in perpetuity, leaving Te Patukirikiri no alternative but to have their lands acquired by the Crown; and
 - 3.7.4 these actions deprived Te Patukirikiri of their rangatiratanga over land subject to residence site licences and breached Te Tiriti o Waitangi/the Treaty of Waitangi and its principles.
- 3.8 The Crown acknowledges that the cumulative effect of its actions and omissions, including confiscation, the operation and impact of the native land laws, continued Crown purchasing, and Public Works takings has left Te Patukirikiri virtually landless, undermined their economic, social, and cultural development, and led to the alienation of sites of cultural and spiritual significance including Whanganui Island and Ngorongoro. The Crown's failure to ensure that they retained sufficient land for their present and future needs was a breach of Te Tiriti o Waitangi/the Treaty of Waitangi and its principles.
- 3.9 The Crown acknowledges the harm endured by many Te Patukirikiri children from decades of Crown policies that strongly discouraged the use of te reo Māori in school. The Crown also acknowledges the detrimental effects on Māori language proficiency and fluency and the impact on the inter-generational transmission of te reo Māori and knowledge of tikanga Māori practices.
- 3.10 The Crown recognises that through its actions and omissions it has contributed to the economic and spiritual hardship and marginalisation of Te Patukirikiri in its rohe.

APOLOGY

- 3.11 The Crown apologises to the people of Te Patukirikiri for the prejudice they have suffered as a result of its actions, and its breaches of Te Tiriti o Waitangi/the Treaty of Waitangi and its principles. The Crown hopes that this settlement marks the beginning of a new relationship with Te Patukirikiri based on good faith and cooperation.
